The new Cortana app for iPad is built using the same "Not All Web" framework for Windows 10-based devices, providing users with the ability to access their favorite apps and information using the voice-activated assistant. Microsoft says the app supports searches and actions within apps, SiriKit (iOS 11) functionality for third-party apps, and notifications similar to those on Windows 10. "It's easy to get started with Cortana on your iPad: just speak and the app will respond with what you need," says Christina Böhme, Microsoft senior VP of Al and research, in a company blog. "Whether you're looking for facts or accessing app features, getting the right information is just a voice away."

Microsoft is also releasing this week a version of the iOS app for Windows 10, which will be available in the App Store with Cortana. The Windows Insider app, which is available in c6a93da74d
